Bring Something To The Table

Photography by Read McKendree

The steel support in this New York City loft was essential for holding up the timber beams overhead, but its placement in the open space between the living area and kitchen was less than ideal. The team at Studio Todd Raymond came up with the idea of turning it into the off-centered base of what's now the dining table. A fluted wood wrap and mounted sconce infuse mealtimes with extra warmth in the industrial space.
